Stop the 'Press'-es: Team USA defeats England, advances to World Cup final Goals from Christen Press and Alex Morgan, and Alyssa Naeher's penalty send the U.S. into Sunday's final.

JOE PANTORNO
joseph.pantorno@metro.us

You can't have a much better 30th birthday than the one Alex Morgan just had, but she might want to buy a present for goal-keeper Alyssa Naeher.

The United States continued its trend of rebellious behavior this time of year against England, booking their place in the 2019 FIFA Women's World Cup final with a 2-1 semifinal victory over the Three Lionesses on Tuesday.

Morgan provided the game-winning header in the 31st minute, supporting Christen Press' opener that was equalized by England star striker Ellen White in the first half.

Naeher, however, was the hero in the match's final moments, denying a Steph Houghton penalty with six minutes remaining to punch the United States' ticket to the final.

Her big save was the crescendo of a final 25 minutes that was largely dominated by the English underdogs.

While Naeher played the part of stalwart, it was vital to see another American not named Megan Rapinoe score in the knockout round. The star forward was sidelined by a hamstring injury for the semifinal. She had accounted for all four goals against Spain and France in the knockout round.

Her replacement for the night, Press, helped American supporters quickly forget about Rapinoe's absence, however, putting the U.S. on top in the 10th minute.

A picture-perfect cross from Kelley O'Hara served the ball on a silver platter for the American forward. Press barely had to leave the ground at the far post, cannoning her header into the back of the net.

It was the first time this tournament that England trailed — and they found an answer quickly.

Just nine minutes after Press' opener, White flicked home a cross from Keira Walsh to knot things up at one. It was White's sixth goal of the tournament, putting her in the lead for the golden boot over Morgan and Rapinoe.

That would last only 12 minutes, however.

Morgan put the U.S. in front in the 31st minute when she headed home Lindsey Horan's cross to give the Americans a half-time lead. It was her first goal of the tournament since torching Thailand for five in the group-stage opener.

White looked to reclaim the golden-boot lead in the 68th minute when she got behind the American defense and beat keeper Alyssa Naeher, but she was deemed offside after a video-assisted review.

VAR almost came back to bite the Americans with 10 minutes remaining when it was deemed Becky Sauerbrunn took Ellen White down in the box, making contact with the striker's back leg. However, Naeher stoned Houghton in the 84th minute to preserve the American lead.

The Connecticut native had it all the way, ranging to her right to stop the low, soft shot of Houghton.

Naeher and Co. will now wait for the winner of the other semifinal between Sweden and the Netherlands on Wednesday to see who they'll face in the title match on Sunday morning.

Sweden is one of the United States' largest rivals, the two having already played in the group stage. The U.S. exacted revenge on the Swedes for a 2016 Summer Olympics loss in the quarterfinals, winning 2-0 in the Group F finale last month.

Brooklyn woman becomes 15th cyclist to be killed in city

Devra Freeland, 28, was killed while riding her bike on a Williamsburg street earlier this week.

BECCA GLASSER-BAKER
Rebecca.Glasser@metro.us

A Brooklyn cyclist was struck and killed by a cement truck on Monday, becoming the 15th city cyclist to be killed so far this year, and the third in the past week.

Devra Freeland, 28, was a well-known sculptor and video artist whose work had been featured throughout the city. On Monday, heading north on her bike toward a Williamsburg intersection, Freeland collided with an east-bound cement truck.

Outlets reported that she was seen on surveillance footage entering the Boerum Street and Bushwick Avenue intersection at about 12:20 p.m. when she struck.

NBC reported that the truck driver remained on scene and had a green light when he struck the rider.

As of Tuesday afternoon, police were still investigating the incident. No arrests had been made.

Freeland becomes the 15th cyclist to die in 2019, already surpassing last year's total of 11. According to The Brooklyn Eagle, 11 of the 15 deaths in 2019 occurred in Brooklyn.

The other victims killed within the past week were Ernest Askew and Robin Hightman. Askew was hit by a teen driver and ended up dying in the hospital, Pix 11 reported. CBS reported that Hightman was killed by a truck and pronounced dead upon arrival at the hospital.

In a Tuesday interview with Pix 11, Mayor Bill de Blasio said: "We have to do something different now. Look, this is a crisis. For five years, Vision Zero has been working consistently, driving down fatalities. We had 100 fewer fatalities last year than we had five years earlier. But this — these last weeks, and few months really, have been horrible, and my heart goes out to everyone, to the families but also, I think, people who use bicycles all over the city are feeling this right now. We are going to do something different."

In a Monday release, de Blasio said he was directing the NYPD to "immediately launch a major enforcement action that will encompass every precinct and crack down on dangerous driving behavior like parking in bike lanes. At the same time, I have charged the Department of Transportation with developing a new cyclist safety plan to make biking in our city safer. No loss of life on our streets is acceptable."

Organizations like Transportation Alternatives criticized the mayor and shared their statement on Twitter: "To that end, Transportation Alternatives is calling on the mayor to immediately task DOT commissioner with creating an emergency response plan worthy of this crisis that can be implemented as soon as possible."

Additionally, they are calling for City Council to pass a Vision Zero State of Emergency Omnibus Bill to "bundle a suite of recently proposed traffic safety laws."

House panel sues Treasury, IRS over Trump's tax returns

Democrats want a look at the president's records from 2013 to 2018.

A House of Representatives panel on Tuesday filed a long-awaited lawsuit in federal court to demand President Donald Trump's individual and business tax returns.

The House Ways and Means Committee filed the lawsuit against the U.S. Treasury Department and Internal Revenue Service after Treasury Secretary Steven Mnuchin refused a legal request for the records and defied two congressional subpoenas seeking the returns.

The filing sounded the starting gun in what is widely expected to be a lengthy legal battle that is likely to end in the Supreme Court.

There was no official comment from the Trump administration, but Trump attorney Jay Sekulow said: "We will respond to this latest effort at presidential harassment in court."

Democrats want Trump's tax records from 2013 to 2018, which legal experts have said could shed light on the president's business dealings. Such a legal process, experts said, could unfold slowly and become an issue in the 2020 election.

Mnuchin refused to hand over the returns after House Ways and Means Committee Chairman Richard Neal asked for the documents on April 3, under a federal law that says Treasury "shall furnish" such records upon request. The committee believes it is the first time an administration has denied such a request, the lawsuit said.

"In refusing to comply with the statute, defendants have mounted an extraordinary attack on the authority of Congress to obtain information needed to conduct oversight of Treasury, the IRS, and the tax laws on behalf of the American people," the lawsuit said.

Neal said in a statement that the panel was now pursuing the matter in court because of the administration's "noncompliance."

"The judiciary has been a bulwark against Trump's steaming corruption and roughshod lawlessness. I have no doubt our lower courts will side with Congress," Rep. Bill Pascrell, a Ways and Means Democrat who has helped lead the campaign to obtain Trump's returns, wrote on Twitter.

Democrats who wanted Neal to move to court more quickly expressed relief at the filing. "This long-overdue legal action is needed to keep this bad president from setting a bad precedent," Rep. Lloyd Doggett said in a statement.

Congressional Republicans condemned the effort as a dangerous political fishing expedition by Democrats that could "weaponize" confidential taxpayer information.

"The Democrats' partisan, flawed lawsuit continues their unprecedented and illegitimate pursuit to expose President Trump's private tax information."

Rep. Kevin Brady

"The Democrats' partisan, flawed lawsuit continues their unprecedented and illegitimate pursuit to expose President Trump's private tax information," Rep. Kevin Brady, the top Republican on Neal's committee, said in a statement.

Ways and Means is one of half a dozen panels in the lower house that are conducting investigations involving Trump and his administration, from his campaign's contacts with Russians during the 2016 presidential race to the sprawling business interests he has not divested since taking office.

The White House is refusing to cooperate with most of them, setting up other expected legal battles. REUTERS

White House says Trump's July Fourth will be patriotic, not political

White House officials on Tuesday said President Trump will avoid politics and stick to patriotic themes in a high-profile July Fourth speech in front of the Lincoln Memorial amid questions about the cost and tone of the celebration.

U.S. battle tanks were spotted on a cargo train in Washington on Tuesday morning, a sign of the military firepower that will be featured as part of a July Fourth celebration that will differ significantly from past events.

For decades, presidents have kept a low profile during Washington's annual celebration of the 1776 Declaration of Independence, which typically draws hundreds of thousands of people to Washington's monument-lined National Mall for a nonpartisan concert and fireworks.

This year, Trump plans to speak at a military "Salute to America" that will feature military bands and flyovers from the U.S. Navy's Blue Angels and Air Force One, the modified Boeing 747 that transports presidents.

The event could also feature M1 Abrams battle tanks, a B-2 bomber, F-35 and F-22 fighter jets, and the Marine One helicopter that transports the president, the Pentagon said. Air traffic at nearby Ronald Reagan National Airport will be suspended during the flyovers and the fireworks, according to the FAA.

Democrats in Congress have questioned whether Trump will turn a nonpartisan patriotic celebration into a taxpayer-funded campaign rally.

"That's absolutely ridiculous. This is all about a salute to America. The president is not going to get political," White House spokesman Hogan Gidley said on Fox Business Network on Tuesday.

The administration to date has not said how much Trump's pumped-up July Fourth celebration will cost. The Pentagon postponed a military parade planned for last November after it estimated it could cost $90 million.

"It is unacceptable that the Interior Department is failing to inform Congress about how it plans to spend taxpayer money to fund the president's lavish July Fourth plans, which reportedly include special access to the National Mall for the politically connected," Democratic Sen. Tom Udall said in a statement.

A VIP section set up near the Lincoln Memorial will be open to government officials and lawmakers, according to a White House official speaking on condition of anonymity. In previous years, government officials and other VIPs have watched the fireworks from the White House lawn. REUTERS

Writer-director Ari Aster on horror masterpiece 'Midsommar'

The summer-vacation-gone-horribly-wrong film opens in theaters today. PAT KING

The films made by visionary director Ari Aster create worlds that you feel like you should leave as soon as possible but seem compelled to stay in. His first release, "Hereditary," dealt with how one family navigates grief and trauma and how it can cause irreparable rifts after a death in the family. Well, that is a watered-down way of explaining it. The horror film twisted like a knotted tree and provided some of the most unexpected supernatural scares, and burrowed deep into your core with supreme attention to detail that required multiple viewings to fully comprehend. His newest film, "Midsommar," which opens in theaters today, is a continuation of his unique way of approaching anguish and loss and is the filmmaker's best work to date and destined to become a masterpiece of the horror genre.

The film stars actress Florence Pugh as Dani, who is in a toxic and codependent relationship with fellow graduate student Kristian, played by Jack Reynor. The couple could have gone their separate ways long ago — until Dani is struck with a terrible loss in her family. This just perpetuates things, and Kristian, although begrudgingly, chooses to stick with her and offer his support through the trying time. Kristian and a couple of his fellow friends from school, Josh (William Jackson Harper) and Mark (Will Poulter), take up the offer of their Swedish exchange-student friend Pele (Vilhelm Blomgren) to visit the tightly-knit commune that he grew up in, the Harga, for their annual midsummer festival over summer break.

To the chagrin of the group, Dani decides to tag along. Once they arrive, the group is taken inside the world of the Harga and their paganistic religion and way of living. They are given numerous ancient hallucinogens to become more open to the experience, with the community's charming Nordic outfits and seemingly funny and harmless customs. It's from there that things take a turn for the worse, and the group realizes that the Harga's practices are more dangerous than they would have expected and that they can either assimilate and chalk it up to cultural differences, or leave before their lives are at risk.

Aster viewed making the film as a meditation on codependency, and how we lose a sense of our identity after a traumatic loss or a terrible breakup.

"I'm fascinated by family structures and surrogate families and certain codependent relationships that people find themselves in and that they seek out," Aster explains. "I'm certainly not exempt from that. I do see this film as a film about codependency. Even our main character [Dani] being in one codependent relationship and then she finds herself in, arguably, a more functional one. It's arguable whether or not it's healthier than the first one. It's also kind of about avoiding looking head-on at something that has died because it is too painful to see that it's dead. I think one reason that it is so painful to see that a relationship has ended is because we are all afraid of dying alone and being alone and facing these existential questions that don't necessarily have an answer. There's this low hum that we spend our lives walking out or covering over and will do anything to avoid being alone long enough to have to confront these things."

Aster created the religion, language and terrifying practices of the community after months of immersive research on Swedish tradition, folklore and mythology. Through that work, the Harga feels like an existing historic culture and some of their horrific traditions seem like irredeemable actions other religions would have made excuses for in the past.

"It was very important to me that this would be a place that felt lived in and felt like it had a very rich history and deep traditions," says Aster. "But at the same time, I wanted this place to also kind of function as a fulfillment of all of Dani's needs, which are being denied throughout the film. In a big way, I really see this community as almost being a manifestation of Dani's will. In that sense, the film is really a fairy tale even more than a horror film about indoctrination. Because there is an indoctrination that happens, but it's all kind of contributing to this wish-fulfillment fantasy that is playing out."

Aster has described this film as a breakup movie inside a horror film. And as Dani and Kristian's relationship starts falling apart amidst the chaos around them, they are both left with grappling with their identity and personal fulfillment. But since this is a horror film at its core, without any spoilers, let's just say that things do not end peacefully.

"It was important to me that people would relate to both sides of this," Aster says of the film's two stars. "We're aligned with Dani so for all intents and purposes, Kristian is the antagonist. I know I've certainly been on both sides of that dynamic."

"Midsommar" opens in theaters today.

Anders Lee was never going anywhere despite reports that he would leave the Islanders. GETTY IMAGES

LEE THE CAPTAIN ISLES DESERVE

PANTORNO'S PERCH

JOE PANTORNO
@JoePantorno

Anders Lee isn't the flashiest hockey player, nor is he the fastest or most skilled.

But he might be the most loyal and loved.

Even on a day where his team, the New York Islanders, lost out on the top free-agent prize in Artemi Panarin, Lee further cemented himself as a fan favorite on Monday.

The Islanders captain, who became an unrestricted free agent on Jul. 1, signed a seven-year, $49 million deal to remain in Brooklyn and on Long Island.

It was the end of a dizzying offseason that saw the Islanders seemingly write off their captain. In reality, it was just the latest example of how the Islanders' captain epitomizes the word loyalty.

President and general manager Lou Lamoriello opted to sign Brock Nelson and Jordan Eberle in May and June while struggling to secure Lee.

Initial reports noted that the two sides could not agree on the length of the deal before they looked abandoned the closer things got to Jul. 1. Especially when the Islanders emerged as the favorites to land Panarin.

Signing Panarin to an expected $12.5 million contract was not going to leave enough room to bring back Lee. At least, that's what we were led to believe.

As the clock inched closer to noon on Monday to commence the free-agency period, however, the Islanders' hopes of landing Panarin evaporated. The Russian star instead opted to take less money and join the crosstown-rival Rangers.

Suddenly, the Islanders were faced with the possibility of another disastrous Jul. 1. Goalie Robin Lehner was on his way out of town — he joined the Blackhawks — while Lee was being linked to the likes of the Montreal Canadiens and Chicago.

It turns out, however, that Lee was never really leaving.

Per Brett Cyrgalis of the New York Post, Lee and the Islanders agreed on a $7 million-per-year average annual salary back in training camp last year. That number didn't change, allowing the Islanders to make a push for Panarin or another big-name goal scorer.

Once the Islanders offered seven years, Lee was here to stay.

The soon-to-be 29-year-old opted not to use any words to reveal that he was staying with the Islanders. Instead, he posted the iconic clip from The Wolf of Wall Street where Leonardo DiCaprio — in a profanity-laced tirade — so creatively assures his employees that "I'm not fing leaving."

His agent, Neil Sheehy, further confirmed Lee's desire to stay with the Islanders in a post on Twitter:

"There was NEVER a moment on this FA Day where it was even a possibility that Anders Lee was going to leave the Islanders no matter what else happened. This type of 'FAKE NEWS' fries my bananas! Anders Lee said the most important quality in a teammate is 'LOYALTY' and he meant it."

Needless to say, there was a faction of Islanders fans ready to run through a brick wall for their captain.

For a younger generation of Islanders fans, this is how a true captain acts. Forget how that last one did things.

Lee doesn't just say the right things like John Tavares did, he follows up on them and acts accordingly. His love for the organization radiates from his being where it's clear he's willing to do anything to win in New York, specifically with the Islanders.

He's not going to fill up highlight reels. He's might never get back to that 40-goal mark from a couple of years ago. But Anders Lee is coming to his own as the captain of the New York Islanders.

And he's here to stay for the long haul.
